Illustrious Designer
Jonathan Adler
Gives KOHLER sinks
a Fresh Twist with a New Collection of Colors

BY NATALIE WAY

When it comes to color, many consider designer Jonathan Adler the patron saint. His ability to transform a simple space into a haven of bold design has become his signature move since the beginning of his illustrious career in the early 1990s. Still committed to ceramic design, Adler has taken on a partnership with kitchen and bathroom manufacturer KOHLER to launch KOHLER Colors Featuring Jonathan Adler, a collection of four special edition color options for six select KOHLER enameled cast iron kitchen and bathroom sinks. Now, at a time when much of the design world is enamored with the idea of pops of color and style that evokes optimism, the collaboration couldn't be more appropriate.

Adler sought inspiration from mood-setting locales and places that were representative of the colors he designed for the collection. Piccadilly Yellow, an exuberant and refreshing option from the collection, channels the vibrant atmosphere of London's Piccadilly Circus.

"There is a very mod quality to Piccadilly Yellow, especially when paired with white. It's unexpected and will always feel fresh," said Adler.

Touching all ends of the globe, the other colors in the KOHLER Colors Featuring Jonathan Adler palette include Palermo Blue, Annapolis Navy, and Greenwich Green—a crisp hue that captures the beauty of the perfectly manicured lawns of an English Estate. As Adler states, "It is not dull avocado green. It's bolder, yet timeless."

Holding strong as a leading force in design, Jonathan Adler has once again found a way for anyone to bring color into his or her home in a tasteful and sophisticated way.
